

Editorial Contributor Guidelines 2017

AviNation strives to give readers insight into the future of aviation by focusing on aviation students, programs, events and innovative approaches to the promotion and continued growth of the aviation industry. AviNation develops content according to an editorial schedule covering major areas of reader interest. Articles, in general, are geared toward encouraging youth to pursue aviation careers at every level.

Submitted editorial should focus on matters of interest within the following broad categories: Aviation Education, Aviation Careers, Aviation Professional Profiles, Aviation Products & Innovations and overall Aviation General Interest. Submissions should be non-commercial in nature; however, product and service references can be included.

These guidelines are designed to help contributors deliver quality material with minimal need for rework.

Articles that do not meet these standards will be sent back for revision or rejected.
